

Alpha starts so near the bottom of the first page that only one of its lines would fit there, which is one short of the two that must stay behind. Nothing gained by moving the break earlier, so the whole paragraph goes over.

Beta runs past the second boundary with a single line left below it, which is one short of the two that must be carried over. Here the run is long enough to give a line up, so the break moves earlier rather than the paragraph moving whole. It carries five lines in all and needs every one of them to say so.